Wastewater as a Resource – Time to Integrate the Circular Economy Principles

In a world where demand for fresh water is continuously growing and where the limited water resources available are becoming increasingly stressed by over-abstraction, pollution and climate change, wastewater presents opportunities for successfully recovering resources contributing to circular economy and enabling long-term sustainable development. The report published by the European Investment Bank in May 2022, provides a concise overview of these opportunities.

The report can be viewed at this link.

Closing in on the Finish Line Utility Management Training Passes the Seventh Training Module

The first Utility Management Training class is approaching graduation, having passed the core training week of module 7, and steering towards the final module 8, which will be held as a live course in November in Vienna.

UMT, the Utility Management Training is the flagship program of D-LeaP, the Danube Learning Partnership. Cooperating with leading utilities in Central and Eastern Europe, Sofia University, and the World Bank as an institutional partner, this program aims to “equip” current and future water-sector managers with tools and techniques to support their decision making, and to promote best practices to ensure reliable, safe, inclusive, transparent, and responsive WSS services delivered by efficient, resilient, innovative and economically sustainable utilities.
